INTRODUCTION

Among the valuable genealogical sources at the Baltimore City Archives is a collection of coroner inquest reports. The records relate to investigations of about 4,000 persons dying in the city from murder, suicide, violence, or other circumstances deemed suspicious. Dates covered are 1827, 1835 to 1860, 1864, and 1867. The reports are one of the few sources that document deaths occurring in Baltimore prior to 1875 when the municipality started to keep comprehensive vital statistics. The significance of these records, coupled with their heavy use by researchers, led to compilation of this index.

THE ORIGIN AND NATURE OF THE INQUEST REPORT

The office of coroner originated in medieval England. English coroners had a variety of duties, the most significant of which was investigation of deaths suspected to have occurred from foul play. Soon after Maryland's founding, the governor appointed a local official to serve as sheriff and coroner for the colony. Mounting instances of suspicious deaths compelled appointment of a separate coroner for each Maryland county in 1666.¹ In Maryland, coroners were specifically responsible for holding inquests over the bodies of persons thought to have died by misadventure, murder, suicide, or violence. Inquest procedures required the summoning of a special jury to review evidence associated with such deaths. Coroners could also arrest any individual implicated in a homicide. Their length of appointment varied until 1777 when the state constitution mandated terms of one year.² Although coroners were state officials, they were paid a flat fee by a local government for each inquest held.

Baltimore city coroners had an ongoing feud with the municipal government during the nineteenth century over payment of fees. The municipality expressed concern at various times that an excessive number of inquests were being held. Some city officials suspected coroners were defrauding the municipality by holding phony or unnecessary inquests to increase their fees. To prevent this, the state and city enacted a number of laws making suspected murders the only legitimate cause for inquests, and coroners were warned under penalty of a stiff fine to avoid investigating the results of fatal accidents and diseases.³

In addition to the controversy over what kinds of deaths required inquests, coroners also regularly complained that the municipality was exceedingly slow in paying fees--as much as eighteen months late in some cases. A petition from the Baltimore coroners sent to the city council in 1843 strongly protested this practice.⁴ The council rejected this complaint and claimed that since coroners were overpaid they could easily afford the wait. In 1855, the municipality finally relented and began paying coroners quarterly.⁵

Additional changes soon followed for Baltimore coroners. In 1860, the state required a physician to attend inquests dealing with violent deaths, and in 1868 coroners were themselves required to be physicians. These regulations came about because of concern that non-physicians were incapable of detecting proper causes of death. In 1939, the state did away with the coroner system entirely and replaced it with the current Department of Post Mortem Examiners.⁶

The Archives has about 4,000 inquest reports. About 20 percent deal with unidentified individuals, usually children under six months of age. Unidentified persons are not treated in the index. About 25 percent of those covered by the records are female; about 10 percent are Black. Most of the inquests date between 1845 and 1858; there are relatively few items for the years prior to 1840 and after 1860. And despite the various laws passed to restrict the types of deaths requiring an inquest, the reports detail numerous categories of fatality. Out of the approximately 3,200 names covered in the index, 29 percent list natural causes as the reason for death; drownings also account for 29 percent. Other accidents are noted for 15 percent; intemperance, 10 percent; murder, 6 percent; unknown, 5 percent; suicide, 4 percent; and exposure, 2 percent. Apparently, the Baltimore coroners consistently investigated not only suspicious causes of death, but also fatalities that were accidental or sudden.

Since medical science was primitive during the mid-nineteenth century, many of the ascribed causes of death have to be viewed skeptically. Some of the more obviously inaccurate causes listed are "eating crabs and cabbage", "eating immoderately of green fruit, thereby producing a violent attack of cholera morbus", "drinking cold water while in a heated state", and "an attack of cholera morbus brought on by drinking intoxicating liquor". Noted causes of death are also good indications of how dangerous life was in Baltimore during the previous century. Fatal hazards included riots, drownings, drunken brawls, bursting grindstones, careening wagons, falls into privies, exploding soda fountains, and improperly prepared prescriptions.

Exactly why the Archives has these records is unknown. The municipal government was responsible for paying coroners on the basis of inquests performed, and it is likely the coroners prepared the reports for this purpose. Unfortunately, reports survive only for some years and in varying quantities. Careless maintenance by former custodians has contributed to these gaps.

Many of the surnames listed in the index are spelled several different ways. Ages, where they are provided, are also prone to inaccuracy; many are expressed in suspiciously round figures that suggest approximation.

Despite some shortcomings, the coroner inquest reports are a uniquely valuable historical source. In conjunction with a series of interment reports dating from 1834 to 1840 (also held by the Archives), the inquests are one of the most comprehensive record of deaths occurring in Baltimore City prior to establishment of the present system of vital statistics in 1875. The interment reports cover about thirteen thousand persons listed as being buried in Baltimore between 1834 and 1840. Included is the name, cause of death, cemetery, race, and whether the person was free or slave. A name index to the interment reports is also available.

HOW TO USE THE INQUEST REPORT INDEX

The index is arranged first by the surname, and then by the given name, of persons noted as deceased in the reports. When the reports give details about a decedent's race, age, or occupation, this information is included in parentheses following the name of the deceased. The other category of data is the date of the inquest (usually soon after the death in question occurred). The index provides information in the format described below.

Persons desiring more information about names listed in this index can write or visit the Baltimore City Archives, Room 201, 211 E. Pleasant Street, Baltimore, MD 21218. The Archives is open to the public from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. weekdays.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This index was prepared under the auspices of the Baltimore City Archives by Anne S. Turkos, Michael A. Grimes, and William G. LeFurgy. Our work was vastly simplified by use of a microcomputer; staff members Betty Davis and Thomas Hollowak entered information into this marvelous machine. Mr. Hollowak also greatly assisted with editing the manuscript. Eva Slezak of the Maryland Genealogical Society was indispensable in getting this volume published. I would like to express my gratitude to each of these people.
